Securing your home.

Residential access control operators are designed for single-family home or gated communities. Depending on the type and size of gate – chain link, ornamental iron, PVC or wood – access control devices can be integrated into the landscape design. In addition to the radio-controlled access that is the preferred system for residences, Merchants Metals offers a wide range of key-pads, telephone systems and keypads.

Controlling commercial access.

Various access control systems are available for commercial and industrial sites that require a more sophisticated access control system. The selection of the appropriate access control device is dictated by traffic patterns, security requirements and gate styles. These systems can be standalone and/or PC-controlled and are programmable to monitor access activity.

Protecting industrial and high security sites.

Government and correctional facilities, airports, public utilities and chemical plants require an even higher level of security and access control. These high security applications utilize systems that can include the integration of access control devices such as card or biometric readers with crash-rated barricades, gates and pop-up bollards.

What are access control systems?

Access control systems combine gate operators with one or more control devices to allow or restrain entry or exit through a given point. Increasingly sophisticated hands-free technologies offer security and improved access control for residences, businesses and industrial sites.

These standalone or PC-controlled devices include radios, key pads, card readers, bar code readers and telephone entry.

Controlling Access Radio-controlled access is the preferred system for most residences. Larger properties and businesses typically require keypads, telephone systems or card readers which are available in a variety of efficient and cost-effective styles, including barcodes.

Security Businesses and industrial sites requiring more sophisticated security frequently call for standalone and PC-controlled systems that log employee and visitor entrances and exits. To ensure the highest levels of security, these systems employ radio-controlled entry, proximity readers or keypads, or biometric security.

Safety Whether for home or business use, safety is always a critical concern. Every system distributed by Merchants Metals exceeds the safety codes outlined by UL 325 to prevent bodily injury. All access control devices incorporate various alerts including photo cell detectors, reversing gate edge, electro-magnetic vehicle sensors or audio-visual alarms. All of which can stop a gate from closing on a person or vehicle.
